c. The total finals increased by 5.9% over September 1953.

d. The attached chart, Tab B, indicates the 90-day old cases increased from 92 at the end of September to 148 at the end of October 1953. This is an increase of 37.8% over the previous month. It is felt this increase for the most part is a result of re-organization of the [redacted] which caused additional responsibilities to be placed on the Desks. However, it is felt this situation has been corrected and the trend of 90-day old cases in succeeding months will be downward.

2. The attached chart, Tab C, shows the total pending covert cases decreased by 17.8% while the overt pending cases decreased by 2.7%

3. It is noteworthy that during the last six-month period the investigative assignments of the Special Referral Branch of this Division have increased 35% in receipts and 56% in completions. There has been no recent significant changes noted in the receipts and completions of outside agency name checks or of CE checks.

SUPPORT:

1. In order to acquaint the operating units contemplating the use of [redacted] with the security aspects surrounding such sites, arrangements have now been made to forward results of investigations to these operating units. It is felt that such reports of investigation will provide the operating units with sufficient information in order to utilize these sites with a maximum degree of security.

3. The Chief, Cover Branch/SSD, has been designated security adviser to the Agency insurance task force which is conducting studies of insurance programs within CIA.

7. It is also noteworthy that in many instances SO/SSD has embarked upon specific areas of support as an accommodation to meeting urgent needs and requirements. It has then continued on a permanent basis to provide service in the specific areas involved without recourse to budget technicalities or other administrative details. These accommodations have been gradually assumed by SO/SSD consistent with the fundamental philosophy of the Security Office of service to the Agency and its components.

8. The impressive amount of support functioned by SO/SSD and the special involved areas concerned in this work have required that SO/SSD gear itself from the standpoint of training, equipment, study and research to perform these most important functions. Specialized investigative techniques have been developed and emphasis has been placed on the absolute necessity of developing confidential contacts and sources of assistance. The excellent record of SO/SSD in this field stands as mute and striking evidence of the versatility of this office. It has also resulted in the development of a type of investigator, specialist and coordinated unit not to be found elsewhere in Government.

9. The increase in the percentage of support work performed by the Security Office has been increasing steadily each year, as reflected in the attached chart, Tab D. It can be fairly commented that the increase in amount has also been accompanied by an increase in the complex and challenging nature of this activity. Administration has therefore, by necessity, been tuned to the future in terms of meeting any and all requests. The past record of SO/SSD in this field has been such that as a matter of administration no limits or restrictions have been placed upon what SO/SSD can do in support of Agency operations. Rather, it is the established policy of SO/SSD that operating components with any difficulty whatsoever are urged to present the difficulty to the Security Office, irrespective of their confidence or feelings as to whether the problem can be successfully solved. The Security Office recognizes no problem as insurmountable, and with this guiding policy the Special Security Division looks forward to ever increasing service to CIA in this field from which intense satisfaction and pride of accomplishment can be found.
